Modern Ways and Improvements. It is true that China needs many other things besides Christianity, ways Francis H. Nichols, in the Atfantic. She would be greatly better off if she had railroads and clean hotels, and a knowledge of geography and post offices and factories, but the lack of these is due not to the inabil-By of the Chinese to provide them, but to their failure to appreciate their meed of them. No mention of them is made in the chart by which they are steering. China has succeeded in existing almost from the beginning of the world without them; therefore they are useless. The Chinese nature is patient and the Chinese brain is resourceful. The stories oft told in Tientsin of how native engineers. with very crude tools and comparatively little experience, repaired locotives that the Boxers had wrecked is proof that the Chinese are capable with very little instruction of building and operating railroads. The Chinese do not build railroads because they do not want them, just as they do not want anything that would mecessitate a change in their methads or customs. They lack incentive, not ability; and the spiritual element of Christianity is the only incentive that will ever make them appreciate that a chart, no matter how perfectly made, can never include all of the expanding scope of human life and endenvor.

The Man of the Village.

The population of Shelley, Suffolk, England, is 75. There is no resident parson, no resident squire, and no public house. Neither is there any school, but there is a school board. The parish consists of four farms, two of which are occupied by widows and the other two by one man who is consequently the Man of Shelley. The Man of Shelley is clerk to the school board, treasurer to the school board, and practically all parish officials in one.
